

Animal Activist, Award Winning Filmmaker Opens Pet Sitting Service

BURBANK – Award winning independent filmmaker Christy Oldham has accomplished her next vision: opening a quality pet sitting and dog walking service called Healthy Dogs. She caters to busy industry professionals and elderly people, while providing reliable care for pets in the comfort of their own homes while their owners are away.

“A lot of my filmmaking colleagues wanted quality care for their furry kids, but were weary of individuals who claimed to be pet sitters and who had limited experience in animal care,” Christy says from her office in Burbank.

A native of south Louisiana, Christy has over 15 years animal care experience, rescue and volunteer work. She studied Veterinarian Science at NSU, before changing her career direction to filmmaking. She always made time for rescue and volunteer work, however.

Artistically talented, Christy began donating her impressionistic artwork to charities like St. Martins Animal Foundation.

“My long-term goal is to open a ranch in the vein of Best Friends Sanctuary in Utah. My filmmaking career will help me do that.”

She currently volunteers at the German Shepherd Rescue and is in talks with the Burbank Animal Shelter to shoot an educational video. “Education is key to preventing animal cruelty,” she says.

Christy is a well-respected member of the film and animal community and Pet Sitters International. She serves clients in the San Fernando Valley and Hollywood areas. Ten percent of all profits go to hurricane Katrina pet victim charities.
